

A better understanding of how a particular viewpoint or set of actions become 'legitimate' is vital to building more inclusive and equitable markets. If certain discursive forums are less legitimate this may well mitigate against good arguments carrying due weight in important societal debates.